Chorale preludes, in the Lutheran Church, serve to introduce a chorale, or hymn, just as the organist in a contemporary church introduces a hymn by playing it through for the congregation. The melody most commonly appears either in the soprano (the highest voice) or in the pedal, while the other voices play a more or less elaborate accompaniment. Buxtehude, unlike the other composers in this program, elaborates the melody itself, to the point that the minister of his church felt compelled to announce the hymns on a signboard since "from the organ playing beforehand, the hymns can be recognized by only a few." The final piece on the program follows Buxtehude's example in presenting a highly elaborated form of the familiar melody.
